

Twice in a Lifetime

A Second Chance?

Is there such a thing as a second chance at love? When an angel sends Frank back to 1944, he discovers he loves Claire even more this time around. But will the doubts and fears that ended their relationship again tear them apart? Or will Frank learn to trust Claire, and their love this time?

In my 75,000 word time-travel romance, Twice in a Lifetime, Frank Brennan is given a second chance at love. A student angel working on earning her wings shows up in his nursing home room offering to take him back in time, to Plymouth, England in 1944. It was here Frank experienced, and lost, the love of his life. He was devastated when he found Claire with another man. He's never understood why she professed to love him and then cheated on him. Even after all these years Frank is still bitter over her betrayal. And he still mourns the death of his best friend Cal, who died in a training accident just before D-Day. He accepts the angel's offer, determined to save Cal this time around, even if it means he'll have to meet Claire once more. The angel warns that Frank can't change the events of history; the only thing he can change is his reaction to those events. Undeterred by her warning, Frank plunges ahead with his plan to save his friend. But going back is far harder than he imagined. As he relives the events of 1944, Frank discovers new insights into old tragedies. To his surprise, he also discovers a love for Claire even stronger than he remembered. But the secrets that drove them apart threaten their love once more. Can he save his friend and win the love of his life? Or will Frank be doomed to repeat the mistakes of the past?
